

Saline acts as a "safety valve," automatically returning electrocautery current to prevent over-treatment or carbonization. The bipolar energy flows to tissue, thereby dehydrating cells, causing hemostasis.